I would like to voice my displeasure at the settlement proposed for the Microsoft Antitrust case.

With text that determines the definition of a Windows Operating System Product including the following: "The software code that comprises a Windows Operating System Product shall be determined by Microsoft in its sole discretion."
Indicates that by simply changing the name of a product they could avoid a lot of the restrictions.

Add on Microsoft's tendency to bend ethics in sending support letters from the deceased, I would not be surprised if they would bend words to simply avoid restrictions in the proposed settlement.

Thank You,
